Knut Røflo (53) has been hired as the new CEO of AquaGen Europe. He will take up the position on November 1st.

For the past 20 years, Knut has held several leading positions in Cermaq, EWOS and Felleskjøpet. He is currently the CEO of Felleskjøpet Fôrutvikling (FKF), as well as chairman of the board of the Foods of Norway project. He is also a board member of Topigs Norsvin, one of the world's leading breeding companies for pigs. In his 13 years as CEO, Knut has led FKF through a phase of restructuring and commercialization in a sector with increasing international competition.

Going further, AquaGen will consolidate its position in the global fish egg market and meet new challenges and needs from the market with innovations and competitive edge throughout the value chain.

- We have been through an extensive process to find the right leader of AquaGen. Knut has a solid management experience and competence, and in addition he is a visionary, committed and future-oriented leader who will contribute to our success with our ambitions, both in Norway and abroad, says chairman of AquaGen Odd Magne Rødseth.

Knut Røfloth has a Cand. Agric. degree from the Norwegian Agricultural College/NMBU with a Master degree in business and management, later supplemented with a Master of Management from BI Norwegian Business School.
